

the ONE with all the Empty words

by Guru Mani H

Who is better: the one who says they will, but doesn't; or the one who says nothing, but does?

That sentence from your mouth is nothing more than air it's only how you act that shows me if you care

Every time you break your word, one more nail gets hammered into the coffin of our relationship

He made a solemn pledge and said what he would do but didn't have the balls to see the whole thing through

She let me down again much harder than before her hollow phrases bounce from ceiling to the floor

They say that I should trust but based upon their past my faith they'll do it now is fading really fast

Empty words are about as useful, as a bank account with no money in

"I know that I can change" is what he said to me and like a fool I wait to see how things will be

Her promises she breaks I offer to forgive
but now I understand
this is no way to live

They had authority
I soaked in what they said but actions never came so all their claims were dead

Words without actions are meaningless, pointless, empty

He vowed that he would call I waited with such hope but did he ever phone?
that answer, sadly: nope

She really thought this time commitment he had made but sweet talk had a goal he wanted to get laid

They were so full of talk which sounded really good but never followed up to do the things they should

Like a body with no beating heart, so are words without action

He offered me his help but then made an excuse for that kind of support I've not got any use

She gives a rousing speech and all who listen clap but from those words to deeds will be a massive gap

They said it would be done no later than today it seems I cannot trust a single thing they say

Words are cheap,
but effort comes with a high price tag

If there's a gaping hole between your 'say' and 'do' then maybe it's the time to think your life-style through

What you do in silence, shouts far louder than any words
